Alain, April 26.

NO Person has fallen sick or died these eight Days past in this City, nor in the Houses of Quarantain where remain only three Persons who are recovering; and 'tis likely no more will fall sick, considering the Precautions that are taken in sending a Physician and a Surgeon every Day to visit the Houses of Quarantain, and to give necessary Medicines at the beginning of any Indisposition: The Disinfection is carrying on in the Suburbs, and all the Household Furniture are exposed to the open Air.

Avignon, April 11. The Plague seems to be entirely abated, none of the Inhabitants having died here for some Days past, and none are sick; and 'tis believed that most of those in the Infirmary will recover.

Hambourg, April 14. Since the Royal Commission has been refused at Rendsbourg, the Count de Rantzau, who continues here incognito, was summoned to appear there; but not complying hitherto with that Summons, he has therefore added to the Suspicion before conceived of him, and the Danish Court has desired of our Magistrates that he might be delivered up to Justice and be try'd: But they declining this Step, in Consideration of his being a Count of the Empire, have wrote to Vienna to be instructed in their Behaviour in this Affair. The Imperial Minister the Count de Metsch declines likewise to meddle in the Case; nevertheless, as the Count de Rantzau was wanting some time ago in paying due Respect to the Emperor's Orders on a certain Occasion, 'tis believed the Protection of the Court of Vienna may now very probably be denied him. Advices from Stockholm say, that the Commission brought thither lately by M. Betschef, the Czar's Resident, has strengthen'd the King's Resolution for making a Tour into Germany to confer with certain Potentates, and afterwards to visit his Father the Landgrave of Hesse Cassel. Letters from Petersbourg say, that the Domesticks belonging to Count Kinaki, who were left there, have now received Orders to join that Ambassadour at Moscow; from whence 'tis conjectured he designs to return from thence to Vienna through Poland. The Foreigners in Employment in the Muscovite Offices, have each assigned to them their respective Provinces; the Prince Cantimir, Native of Moldau, a Person very learned, is made President of the Senate, and the Czar is so perswaded of this Nobleman's Merit, as to cause to be translated and printed in the Russian Tongue, his curious Treatise of the Turks Government and Religion: His Czarish Majesty has likewise caused to be translated and printed in the same Tongue, the Corpus Juris, and other Books, as likewise the Antiquities of the Tartars and Scythians, which Books were lately discovered at a Place near the Caspian Sea. It is said, the Czar has obtained the Emperor of China's Permission, that Missionaries sent by the Czar may preach the Gospel throughout the Dominions of China. Letters from Dantzick say, that a Courier from the Czar was arrived there, with an Invitation to the Duke of Mecklenbourg to repair to Petersbourg.

This is to inform the worthy Citizens of London, that a List is printed of those, who at the late Election appear to have polled for Humphry Parsons, Esq; Francis Child, Esq; Aldermen, and Richard Lockwood, Esq; which it is hoped is as correct as the Nature of the Thing, and the Shortness of Time would allow: And it is now desired, that every one who can give any Account of themselves, or their Friends being polled by others, or those polled who are dead, or absent, or have no Right, will immediately bring or send Account thereof to Mr. William Hammond, at Lawrence's Coffee-house, in Freeman's Yard in Cornhill, and furnish what necessary Evidence can be obtained for the Proof of their Observations.

To the Worthy Gentlemen of the Livery of the City of LONDON,
The Humble Petition of HUMPHRY SALTER.
You Noble Citizens of LONDON,
I beg you'll hear me or I'm undone;
My Age desires no greater Honour
Than to serve you as ALE-CONNER.
If this Favour you'll bestow,
My Gratitude I'll ever show:
Then grant me your Votes this present Election,
For I rely wholly on your Protection;
And if by your Favour I win but the Day,
My Pipe to your Honour shall constantly play.

Edward Scarlett, Optician to their Royal Highneſſes the Prince and Princeſs of Wales, at the Archimedes and Globe at the Corner of King-Street over-againſt St. Ann's Church, Soho, London;

Who grinds all manner of Glaſſes for Te- leſcopes, from One Foot to One Hundred Foot Radius, and makes all ſorts of Microſcopes: The portable ones being of the neſt invention, and very commodious. As alſo large Concave Burning-Glaſſes, and Convex Looking-Glaſſes, with all other ſorts of Optic Glaſſes; according to the Directions of the Learned, whoſe Rules he always follows. As for Spectacles, he has a more certain Way of fitting different Eyes than that Common, but erroneous one, of pretending to do it by Peoples Ages; becauſe ſeveral Perſons of 30 or 40 Years of Age muſt uſe the ſame ſort of Spectacles as thoſe that are 70 or 80 Years old: Therefore if any Gentleman in the Country that wants Spectacles will pleaſe to ſend him word how near to his Eyes he can read a large Print without making them ake; or if any Perſon that is ſhort-ſighted will let him know the fartheſt Diſtance at which he can read a ſmall Print, he will fit both much better than if they ſent their reſpective Ages. If they have Spectacles already, and would be fitted with others of the ſame ſort, they are deſired to find out what is their Focal Diſtance (that is the Diſtance at which they Burn, when expoſ'd to the Sun) which they may try with any broken Piece as well as whole Spectacles. And that People may be ſure fitted as they grow older, without prejudicing their Eyes, he makes Spectacles of ſeveral ſorts, from one Inch to 36 Inch Focus, which Lengths are all mark'd upon the Frame.
